

Violence Prevention

About SHPPS: SHPPS is a national survey periodically conducted to assess school health policies and programs at the state, district, school, and classroom levels. Comprehensive results from SHPPS 2006 are published in the Journal of School Health, Volume 77, Number 8, October 2007.

Health Education

- The percentage of districts that required elementary schools to teach violence prevention increased from 73.4% in 2000 to 83.6% in 2006,¹ the percentage that required middle schools to teach violence prevention increased from 71.6% to 83.8%, and the percentage that required high schools to teach violence prevention increased from 74.5% to 85.0%.
- Among classes and courses in which violence prevention was taught, the median number of hours of required instruction teachers provided on violence prevention decreased from 4.9 in 2000 to 2.6 in 2006 among elementary school classes and from 4.1 to 2.5 among high school courses.

During the 2 years preceding the study:

- 85.1% of states and 77.6% of districts provided funding for staff development or offered staff development on violence prevention to those who teach health education.
- The percentage of districts that provided funding for staff development or offered staff development on violence prevention to those who teach health education increased from 62.1% in 2000 to 77.6% in 2006.
